At this declaration the Cardinal was given three mighty cheers while many pushed forward to kiss his ring or touch his robes. As his escort started to lead the way out of the room the Police Band in the gallery blared forth "The Star-Spangied Banner." A smile crossed the withered cheeks of the prelate and he drew himself up to his full height and thus stood until the playing was limished. He returned to the residence of Archbishop Hayes, and there spent the afternoon resting.

The play is about Columbia, of which our only personal knowledge was gained during attendance at Mr. Clayton Hamilton's lec'ures on dramatic composition. The piece failed to stir any memories. The first net took place in a fraternity house which seemed to have been a coeducational society. At any rate, there were a number of unattached voung women wandering about who were known as "the girls." Their status was not very cearly established. Mr. Woollcott, of llobart, could not account for them, says, who cook and make their own hats, and she doesn't mind saying that any scion of a royal family—she isn't mentioning any names—who gets a chance to marry the beautifu!
